

```
/Users/Sarie/Documents/CST205/Lab13/venv/bin/python /Users/Sarie/Documents/CST205/Lab13/MadLibs.py
Enter a college minor...Psychology Enter a college major...Linguistics Enter the store you shop at the most...Target Enter the name of a city...San Diego Enter the state where that city is located...California Enter a first name...Charlene Enter a last name...Salazar Enter a common noun...pizza
Enter the name of a social networking platform...Friendster Enter an activity you enjoy doing...sleeping Enter a number...42
Enter an activity you are good at...eating Enter an activity you hate doing...grading Enter an activity you do every morning...bicycling Enter a noun...cheese Enter a noun...birds
Enter a memorable year...1999
Enter the name of a country...Iran Noting your undergraduate minor in PSYCHOLOGY, a qualification which he claims makes you uniquely suited for the job, a corporate recruiter happened to notice your background in LINGUISTICS and thought you might be interested in working part-time at TARGET in SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA, PIZZA sector sources confirmed Friday. "Hello, my name is CHARLENE SALAZAR, and I wanted to touch base with you regarding an exciting PIZZA employment opportunity in the greater northwestern CALIFORNIA area," the email sent to your FRIENDSTER account read in part, adding that your strong SLEEPING skills made you an ideal fit for the 42-hour-per-week position, which also entails EATING, GRADING, and one dedicated shift a week BICYCLING. "For bright, young college graduates such as yourself, especially given your experience with CHEESE and BIRDS, the TARGET in SAN DIEGO Shopping Center is the perfect place to start a career. Also, your current job in software marketing, plus the 1999 semester abroad you spent studying in IRAN, demonstrate you are a great fit for our team-based work culture!" Although the email was promptly sent straight to spam, the recruiter proceeded to call you multiple times, claiming that if you played your cards right, this could one day turn into a full-time position.

Process finished with exit code 0
```